Cotton buyers all over the world are visiting CertifiedCotton.com because they want to know the whole story about the bales they buy. Classing data specifies color, staple, leaf, etc. This information is important, but it means very little if the bales have been damaged by water spray devices or other detrimental ginning practices. Evidence of these practices show up in the mill's laydown room and result in a loss of time, resources, and confidence for all parties involved. Everyday, more cotton buyers are finding out about CertifiedCotton.com and refusing to buy these damaged bales that plague the market. If you are a cotton buyer or a gin and would like to learn more, please visit us on the web or just give us a call.
