

It's not hard to find somebody to talk about the damage a gin can do. Now, it's time to start talking about all the positives a gin can do.

Many people consider all gins to be pretty much the same. If you are one of those people, you are probably missing out on some great benefits. Some gins are setting themselves apart and you can profit by recognizing their efforts.

Conscientious gins around the world take special care in making sure that the fiber they process is protected from excessive temperatures, contamination, and harmful methods such as spraying water directly onto the cotton.

Among that group, some gins have carried their commitment to fiber quality and efficiency even further, by investing in people and equipment to provide quality protection at critical points in the ginning process.

You don't have to become a ginning expert to recognize which gins are going the extra-mile for you. Just look for the Samuel Jackson Certified Cotton Gin label and enjoy the many benefits that help growers, gins, and mills.

To learn more about this program, including finding out how your gin can participate, visit:

www.CertifiedCotton.com

